Lungmar Remote Camp, Ladakh

Ladakh in the winters is otherworldly. Stark and bitterly cold, but beautiful in a way only nature can manifest. Winters are quiet months for tourism, save for those looking to trek some winter routes or those seeking the 'ghost of the mountains' – the stunning and elusive Snow Leopard (Panthera uncia).

Ladakh is among the very best habitats for snow leopard in the world. The cats occupy the upper reaches of this Trans Himalayan region and are listed as schedule 1 species in the wildlife protection act – affording them the greatest levels of protection. This status ensures measures by the government and various state bodies to aid long term conservation through protecting their habitat, increased community advocacy, and maintaining a healthy prey base. It is often said that to see a snow leopard in their snow-laden rugged Himalayan habitat is one of those moments that brings your whole world to a standstill – perfectly camouflaged between the bits of bare rocks and patches of snow, these are some of the most elusive big cats on the planet. Only the luckiest wildlife enthusiasts get to see them. Perhaps a lone animal at a kill, or a mating pair, and often times quietly silhouetted against the perennially blue skies of the region.

Snow leopards move with infinite grace and dexterity, almost poetic in the way they climb down the steep mountain ridges, especially awe inspiring when they are chasing their prey like marmots, blue sheep (Bharal), Marco Polo sheep (Argali), Ibex, and other smaller mammals. Interestingly, snow leopard are the only species in the Panthera family which can purr, unlike roarers like the tigers, leopards and lions. To see a snow leopard in the wild requires time out in the wilderness, patience and the ability to withstand the high altitude and cold temperatures.

LEADER SPEAK

2023 Resolutions and Plans for India's Responsible Luxury Hotel Group – ITC

By Arif Patel – Chief Commercial Officer

The Hospitality sector has seen a bounce back in terms of domestic tourism since the last year, with the ease in travel norms post Covid. The pandemic-induced lockdown and restrictions over the last two years fuelled people's appetite for travels. Brands have witnessed a rise in leisure and business travels, along with surge in demand for MICE destinations. Hills and beaches have been the preferred destination for the travellers, whether for staycations, celebrations, or wedding venues. The havoc created by the pandemic resulted in a conscious, anxious and evolved consumer who comes with the rising awareness and demand for safety. As the hospitality sector is now expected to be buoyant, ITC Hotels' focus on growth and its tenet of "Responsible Luxury" will help us step into 2023 with optimism. We have a great selection of properties to offer, across all the key tourist hotspots across the country whether it is under the clear skies or along the pristine beaches.
